The Cenotaph Trust was established in 2011 and recently renamed the Milton Keynes Rose Trust to more accurately reflect the focus of the Trust's activities. Some of us have been involved since the start and other Trustees have joined us on our exciting journey.

Ten years since the Milton Keynes Rose first opened (9th November 2013), we seek applications to join the Board of Trustees to continue the engagement and development of the Milton Keynes Rose. Through the stories of it's Pillars, it recalls our lives together in the newest of cities, overlooked by the memory of our ancestors.

We look forward to welcoming you!

1. BACKGROUND

The Milton Keynes Rose (MK Rose) located in Campbell Park was co-commissioned by The Milton Keynes Rose Trust, formally the Milton Keynes Cenotaph Trust, with partners the Parks Trust and Milton Keynes Council.

It is a piece of public realm art designed by Internationally renowned artist Gordon Young and designer Andy Altman, offering the public opportunities for commemoration, celebration and contemplation. On the ground it takes the shape of a flower and where the “petals” intersect, engraved granite columns carry dedications in a calendar of significant dates designed to bring people to the space for social interaction and memory making. Opened in 2013, it has provided a gathering space that had hitherto not existed in Central Milton Keynes, through usage it has become an established place to be and one of the most photographed images of Milton Keynes. It is all embracing and inclusive, able to span different cultural groups and needs, groups from various faiths and beliefs or none. The Milton Keynes Rose Trust engage with the community to encourage use, promote the heritage stories contained within it and create a togetherness by sharing events that have and will go on shaping our lives, developing community cohesion.

The Trust support the co-curation with the public of new Pillars through a Pillar nomination process, this has seen nine new inscriptions over the past ten years including a Pillar dedicated to the Windrush Generation, the first permanent memorial outside London. Trustees individually work with a variety of community groups to hold events for instance Disability Awareness Day and Holocaust Memorial Day and as a Project Team with partners the Parks Trust in staging the Corporate and Para Pancake Race and to support the recently very successful MK Foodbank Guinness World Record beating MK CAN!
